STARVING BABIES EAT EACH OTHER

CHILDREN SO HUNGRY THAT THEY TURN CANNIBALS BECAUSE OF LACK OF FOOD.

Children so hungry that they were discovered eating each other is the gruesome story told by Marguerita E. Harison, special correspondent of the New York Evening Post, in describing the horors of the starving sections of Poland.

"An American Red Cross Officer arrived at a hospital in Janow, in Eastern Poland, recently with two small boys, one seven, the other five," she wrote in the Evening Post Magazine. "When he found them in a nearby village they were literally eating each other. The older boy had bitten pieces from the younger one's arm, while the latter had knawed pieces from his brother's ribs.

"It was a clear case of cannibalism, which the writer can vouch for from a direct account. The officer had just returned from a trip through the country districts, where misery and suffering are so universal that cases resolve themselves into conditions and the individual is lost but case hardened as he was, he will never forget that experience.

THE MIKADO

PRESENTED IN THE ARMOURIES, MONDAY AND TUESDAY EVENINGS.

The schedule of the Musical and Literary Club for the season is arranged by the Musical and Literary committees, and two or more members of the Board are responsible for each programme.

Selections from "The Mikado" were assigned to Mrs. Jewell and Miss Paul, but with their typical progressiveness and cleverness they decided to give the entire opera. It is well known that it is one of the most difficult of Gilbert & Sullivan's productions and those who have been in touch with the work of preparation know the many difficulties that those ladies have had to contend with.

Everything was in readiness before Lent to put it on, but owing to the illness of two of the leading members of the cast it had to be postponed. The performance on Monday and Tuesday evenings demonstrated once again what Napanee artists are capable of doing.

Under the direction of Mr. Oscar Telgmann, with Mrs. Jewell as stage manager, the well merited applause and encores showed the appreciation of the audiences, which must be most gratifying alike to the management and the performers, who must have worked very hard at the rehearsals to be enable them to render their parts without a flaw. While the performance of every member of the cast was most creditable we cannot resist the temptation to single out a few for special mention.

Miss Marion Wilson, as "Yum Yum," was very charming, and completely captivated her audience, her sweet voice rendering delightful songs in that part to their best advantage. Miss Leitha Scott and Miss Lois Derry, who completed the three little maids, were equally attractive in their parts as mischievous and fascinating little school girls. Miss Derry sang her solos with particular coquetry, just suiting the parts, while the trios were especially tuneful and pretty.

All will acknowledge that the most brilliant triumph was achieved by Miss Muriel Paul in her inimitable impersonation as [illegible] Her every move and [illegible] was [illegible] keeping with [illegible] to prepare [illegible] enbenevolent old lady [illegible] the leading [illegible] indeed Katisha, and Katisha was priceless. Indeed the Paul family provided most of the stars, for Mr. Grant Paul, as Ko-Ko, was on an equal success with his talented sister, and Mr. A. E. Paul, as the haughty nobleman, Pooh-Bah the part enjoyed by the audience. Every word of his witty part was well uttered and fully appreciated.

Mr. Northwood, as "Nanki Pooh," was very delightful, singing his solos in such a merry and debonair manner that one really believed he was the real son of the Mikado off on a masquerade as a wandering minstrel.

Mr. Barrel, as "Pish Tush," made the most of his part, and seemed thoroughly at ease in his role. The trio, "I am So Proud," by Bish Tush, Ko-Ko, and Pooh Bah being especially well done.

Mr. Sharman, as "The Mikado," was stately and dignified, and his most intricate songs were very well given. Mr. Organ, as his father's delinquent attendant, proved an admirable foil for the awesome monarch.

Last and by no means least we must mention the splendid support given by every member of the chorus, upon which so much depends, ably assisted by the orchestra, which was also of high talent, assisted by artists from Belleville. Mrs. B. Black, as pianist, deserves special mention, not only for her brilliant playing at the performances, but also for her cheerful and untiring work during the rehearsals.

Too much praise cannot be given to the Club for the splendid entertainments they have given the citizens this season, the success of which is a great measure due to the most capable and efficient president, Mrs. Cameron Wilson.

CENTREVILLE

We have just passed through another "near winter."

There has been quite a flow of sap the past few days.

Moving seems to be the order of the day.

Chas. Ingoldsby has moved to his new farm on Centre street, and Mrs. J. P. Whalen, of Erinsville, on to the one vacated by Mr. Ingoldsby. M. J. Kearney is moving this week on to his farm near Tamworth. Jas. Foster, of Milsap, has moved to the Thistle-tage farm purchased by him last fall, and James Rikley has moved into Mrs. McGrath's house.

The remains of the late John Burns, interred in the R. C. vault here some weeks ago, were interred in the family plot on Wednesday.

Some few farmers have started ploughing and it now looks as if spring work would be in operation generally by Monday.

There has been a few light cases of flu here lately.

Trapping is about through for the season, and was a rather paying business.

Now is the time for canned vegetables. For canned asparagus tips, wax beets, pumpkin, tomato, peas, corn, and beans, go to WILSON'S grocery. He has a fresh supply just in.

Captured an Eagle.

The American eagle recently spread-his wings majestically over Canadian soil. The eagle—a real one, by the way—soared from somewhere and lighted in Sandwich, Ont. When he came nobody knows. But it was from a long way off, as he was manifestly exhausted when he alighted on the roof of a new house at the corner of Lot and Peter streets. It was just about noon, and children coming home from school espied him.

The bird stayed on his perch for some time, when the mob gathered below. The eagle surveyed the crowd in a bored manner during the minutes when he was not engaged in searching with his beak for something or things under his feathers. The crowd became larger and more threatening. Finally, one braver than the rest, evidently a Briton without guile, cast the first stone.

The eagle spread his wings to their full extent and waiting not for the year of parley between disputant nations, and fluttered to the ground, and capitulated without more ado.

Down the streets of Sandwich the proud bird trotted with unhurried but dangerous steps. Through a gauntlet of citizens he ran, Indian like, turning his head from right to left with each new step to peck at some venturesome bystander or overardent pursuer. It looked for a time as if the bird would not be captured. But finally came to a man whose attitude was determined. With scarcely a struggle the eagle gave in.

His captor was Clyde Thorton, of No. 81 Peters street.

During the remainder of the day the Sandwich celebrities made tentative peace offerings in the form of pieces of meat. The bird accepted them ungraciously.

Strength of the East.

Francis Yeats-Brown, the British cavalry officer who was "caught by the Bolsheviki" and who has written a most interesting book under that title descriptive of his adventures, is not amazed of the fighting qualities of the purliens of which he lurked for some time in the guise of an outcast-work Hungarian artisan.

"Constantinople," he says, "or at least that portion of it which lies outside the fashionable shopping area affected by tourists, is filthy and dirty to an unbelievable degree.

"'See Naples and die,' says the Neapolitans. I say, 'smell Constantinople—same result.'"

Starfish for the Garden.

The Japanese are now using starfish as a manure, and it is said to give excellent results on rice. An analysis shows the fish to contain nearly five per cent. of nitrogen and a small quantity of phosphoric acid. —Tit-Bits.

FRENCH MUST EXPLAIN

Premier Lloyd George Asks a Plain Question.

One Nation Cannot Be Permitted to Act Without Consent of Allies, and British Will Not Attend Conferences Regarding Germany Until Situation Has Been Straightened Out.

LONDON, April 13. — Premier Lloyd George has informed Premier Millerand of France that Lord Derby, British Ambassador in Paris, will not attend the inter-allied conferences there until the British Government has been officially and definitely assured that France will hereafter act conjointly with her Allies.

Britain's rejoinder to France, which Mr. Lloyd George approved on Saturday before departing for San Remo, was handed to Premier Millerand by Lord Derby in Paris Sunday. The note re-asserts the dispute is not one of enforcement of the treaty terms concerning reparation, disarmament, and the trial of alleged war criminals—all of which terms Britain insists upon quite as much as France, the note points out — but arose from France's independent action in advancing troops into Germany, the other Allies agreed that the German army should be allowed to march into the neutral zone and that instances for the withdrawal at the end of a given time limit.

The British note lays stress upon the principle that the success and the strength of any alliance must depend upon unanimity, and that the conferences at Paris are useless unless there is one of the Allies acts independently.

The British note attaches special importance to the interpretation of the late sentence of the French note made public Saturday, in which the Government assuring that France is reserving liberty of action in all circumstances without the approval of or consultations with the Allies, will also that it considers Great Britain was not duly informed by France before the occupation of the Rhine towns.

The text of the last sentence of the French note on which Great Britain requests an interpretation was as follows:

"The preceding considerations begin stated, the French Government does not hesitate to declare that in all inter-allied questions arising from the execution of the treaty of Versailles no case in which it should not be glad before acting to make sure of the assent of its allies."

Concerning the second point raised in the British note, officials say that diplomatic documents will easily elucidate the matter.

Premier Lloyd George's action in going on a ten-days' sea voyage to avoid entering the city of Paris with France, while it is regarded in certain quarters as the cleverest diplomatic move since the armistice, will prove the rock on which the Franco-British alliance will break up—unless events bring a most radical change in the next few days.

Premier Millerand is determined not to go to San Remo unless the differences with Britain are cleared up before the Supreme Council sessions there begin. Nor will France be represented at the meeting unless a solution is effected in the meantime.

Upon the question whether Lloyd George will consent to satisfy the French by wireless from his boat, depends the momentous question whether or not France will form a definite declaration of independence which will bring about the dissolution of the Entente cordiale—a catastrophe Europe back upon the pre-war basis.

The diplomatic commentator of the Paris Midi sums up the situation as follows:

"Premier Lloyd George asks France to bind herself not to act in the future without obtaining in advance the approval of the Allies. Millerand replies that France has decided to make sure beforehand of the assent of her allies. On the one side is declared that France reserves full liberty of action, and on the other it is stated politely that France cannot renounce this liberty of action."

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarrhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Circulars free. Druggists, 75c.

SOME FREIGHT MOVES

But "Rebel" Switchmen Still Hold Control.

Railroads In the United States Have Been Tied Up by Strike, and Although Passenger Trains Move on a Few Lines, Food Shortage Is Feared In Large Eastern Cities.

CHICAGO, April 13.—The Switchmen's strike in Chicago showed improvement Sunday. Passenger trains were operating on a 100 per cent. basis and railroad officials said freight was moving freely. Food supplies were being rushed to New York and eastern cities.

Strike leaders, on the other hand, disputed claims of the railroads and the brotherhood.

Representatives of the railroad brotherhoods claimed the situation was showing improvement.

"The strike situation is improving all the time," said E. H. Hastings, president of the Switchmen's Union of North America. "All day our men have been attending meetings of switchmen, urging the men to go back to work and let the brotherhoods settle the matter for them."

The statement issued by the railroads had exaggerated the number of men out.

"They claim a total of 66,000 switchmen on strike—more switchmen than were ever employed in the United States," he said.

The Railroad Managers' Association issued a statement late Sunday night that the improvement was general.

"There is a noticeable improvement on every road in the country," the statement said. "The management of the Grand Trunk advises that its striking employes at Battle Creek and Detroit, which returned to work to-day. As the situation continues to improve the railroads are lifting embargoes, through which will come time before freights will move normally. Through passenger and suburban business is maintained 100 per cent."

The "outlaw" railroad strike retains its grip on New York and all points east. Reports were reported joining the strikers throughout Sunday, and, following the regular daily conferences of the sub-committee of the General Managers' Association, J. J. Mantell, chairman of that body, admitted the situation was exceedingly grave.

Drastic curtailment of passenger train service will be made if necessary in order that milk and perishable foodstuffs may be rushed to New York. Strikers permitted the milk trains to reach the city on time Sunday. Millions of pounds of beef and other foodstuffs are speeding eastward from Chicago, Kansas City and other packing centres on New York Central "war-time specials," according to officials of the New York Central.

The most drastic freight embargo ever known in railroad history in the United States is now in effect on all shipments of freight, coal and steel on the Pennsylvania railroad originating west of Altoona for points east.

The significance of the embargo lies in the fact that eighty per cent. of the bituminous coal used in New York and points east comes from the country about Altoona via the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The railroad managers welcomed Sunday, without the "rush hour" scheduling of commuter trains, as an opportunity to reorganize their forces. Pensioners will be called in by the officials, and men will be shifted from other forces to the mobile branches.

Want Local Option.

LONDON, April 13.—"London will probably be the last city in England to go dry, but we've got the British Lloyd George skinned to a frazzle" ("Pussyfoot") Johnson Sunday while preparing for his return to the United States next Tuesday.

"There is a statute providing for local option elections, but we hope to remedy that. We haven't canvassed the situation in the city yet, but don't believe the Sinn Fein is with. Under the new Home Rule Bill they can easily pass local option laws and even large areas of Ulster and much of the other sections probably will go dry. We are going to take up the local option campaign in Scotland this summer."

UNREST IN NEAR EAST.

Activity of Georgians Causing Grave Anxiety.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 13.—Disquieting reports have been received from Batum, where Georgians, who have been opposing allied occupation, threaten to join with Bolsheviki and take over the whole region.

Vice-Admiral Sir Sydney R. Freemantle, commander of the British naval forces in the Near East, left here Monday for Batum on board the Admiralty yacht Sevenne, accompanied by a second battleship. It is said the Soviet forces, near Batum, are strong enough to cause considerable trouble if they are joined by the Georgians. Danger that all of the Caucasus and trans-Caucasus regions, including Armenia, may turn Bolshevik, is causing more uneasiness here than the Syrian and Anatolian situations. The capture of Tuapse during the past week by the Soviets, virtually opened the road to Batum on the next Black Sea port to the southward, and Batum.

Georgian forces advancing on Batum would mean Bolshevik cooperation, it is said. In addition, there is danger the Georgians will attempt to check the passage of supplies over their railroads in the direction of Armenia, which is now at war with Azerbaijan. If this should occur, the situation would become seriously complicated.

Azerbaijan Tartars are fighting the Armenians on both the eastern and western frontiers, according to reports, and engagements have occurred in the vicinity of Zevalyn, thirty miles south of Erivan on the Tabriz railroad, and near Chouncha, sixty miles southwest of Elizabethpol. Fighting, it is said, has been going on for three weeks.

Arab leaders in the districts of Aleppo and Beirut are insisting that the French withdraw their forces from that country, according to travelers who have arrived here.

IRISH LABOR ACTS.

Nation-wide Strike Called to Help Sinn Feiners.

DUBLIN, April 13.—The officials of the Irish Trades Union Congress and the Labor party on Monday issued a call to the workers of Ireland for a general strike throughout the country as a protest against the treatment of political prisoners. The officials in the call demand the release of those imprisoned for political offences.

The general strike call does not affect those employed on newspapers, the telegraph services, the bakers, the humanitarian services and necessary services among the horses and cattle.

George Gavan Duffy, Sinn Fein member of Parliament and envoy of the Irish Republic to the Peace Conference, is bringing to the official attention of that body the treatment of the political prisoners in Dublin. His step was actuated by the following telegram, which he received from Dublin: "Over 100 Republican prisoners incarcerated in Mountjoy Prison in Dublin as common criminals, many for months on end on suspicion without charge, have been on a hunger strike since Sunday, April 4. They demand the release of the agreement obtained by their Bishop Macrory and the Lord Mayor of Dublin, whereby the English Government undertook to recognize the special status of political prisoners.

"Several men are in grave danger and crowds are spending prayers for the dying at the gates of the jail."

The telegram was signed by Kathleen Clarke, of the Board of Aldermen, and Madame O'Rahilly, for the Republican Prisoners' Committee.

SOME TREATY PROBLEMS.

Ottawa to Take Stand on Eight-Hour Day.

OTTAWA, April 13.—The course of the Government in regard to ratification of the conventions, to which Canada is a party, adopted at the International Labor conference will, it is expected, be announced shortly. The Department of Justice now has the matter under consideration.

In regard to the eight-hour day convention, the point arises whether Canada has or has not contracted an international obligation to put the convention into effect. If there is such an international obligation, it might be claimed that the Dominion Parliament has jurisdiction; if there is no international obligation, jurisdiction would lie with the Provincial Legislatures.

Although the Department's opinion has not yet been submitted to council, it is probable that it will favor reference of the convention to the provincial authorities.

Irish Pickets Held.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Ten Irish pickets were held over 24 hours at the British embassy were held for a Federal grand jury Monday by United States Commissioner Richardson on charges of violating a Federal statute making it a felony to "assault" a diplomatic representative of a foreign Government.

The women gave bonds in the sum of $1,000 each. They were Misses Elaine Dugan, Kathleen O'Brien, Katherine McKeown, Mary Welsh, Mrs. Thomas Curtin, and Mrs. Honor Walsh, all of Philadelphia; Miss Helen O'Brien, St. Louis; Miss Margaret Quinn, Boston, and Mrs. Katherine Columbine and Mrs. James Walsh, New York.

Canadian Tobacco.

In order to investigate the possibilities of Canadian tobacco markets, Mr. F. Charlan, chief of the tobacco division, is being sent to England and France by the Department of Agriculture, to interview tobacco manufacturers there. His object is to find out exactly what quality of tobacco would be most suitable to British and French requirements, and what quantities could be absorbed by those countries. This information will in all probability be of great value to Canadian tobacco growers in determining the acreage and character of their crop this year.

Quite Safe.

An old lady was going down a coal mine for the first time in her life, and the cage slowly descended she noticed how she and the rest of the party were dependent upon a single rope for safety. "Do you think it is quite safe?" she asked a brawny miner, who was accompanying the visitors, as she glanced up at the rope. "Don't you fear, mum," was the reply. "You're quite safe. These 'ere ropes are guaranteed to last exactly five months, and this one ain't due to be renewed till tomorrow."

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, April 12.—Opinions at the Union Stock Yards differed as to the market in hogs, some averring that it had declined a full quarter, others that it had risen at least a quarter of a cent. It was generally characterized as a holiday market with all the close of last week, with prices ranging from $18.50 to $18.75, f.o.b. and from $19.50 to $19.75 fed and watered. Other features on the market were the good run of foods to choice cattle and the big run of culls in calves and the general deterioration in the market on calves, a factor which could no longer be ignored. Last week's quotations for the poorer calves were 50c lower than for the preceding week; yesterday they were down another two cents. The market for cows and bulls was quite strong, and quotations were from 25c to 40c higher. Receipts were light, those for the week-end totalling as follows: 170 cars, 2,079 cattle, 3,337 hogs, 1,332 calves, and 38 sheep.

"Dignify" Marriage License Business.

TORONTO, April 13.—There is to be a certain amount of "dignity," and, if conditions warrant, a good deal more difficulty in the procuring of marriage licenses if a suggestion introduced by Dr. Stevenson of London into the Legislature is taken up by the Government. In his bill he proposes to take the privilege of issuing marriage licenses out of the hands of jewelers and others and placing it under the jurisdiction of municipal clerks. In Toronto and larger centres it is expected to furnish remunerative posts for returned soldiers.

Extinction of the Beaver

AN alarming situation has been brought about in the Timagami forest reserve, northern Ontario, as a result of the beaver hunts that have been carried on in that huge territory for the past few years. The beaver, once plentiful in that country of lakes and forests before the Government lifted the ban on their destruction in the early part of 1917, is now threatened with utter extinction, due to the insatiable desire of the Indians and trappers for the pelts of Ammek—the beaver.

The reserve, which takes in thousands of square miles and stretches from Boyce, north of North Bay, on the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway, and runs as far north as Elk Lake City, on the Montreal, bounds some of the finest trapping grounds in Canada; provided that they are nursed along and not ravaged by those whose slogan is "to-day and not to-morrow."

Such broads have been made upon the beavers in the reserve that unless the Government puts the lid on their destruction those highly prized fur-bearing animals will become as extinct as the great auk within the confines of the reserve. It is no exaggeration to say that with the exception of perhaps a few families, the beavers will be wiped clean out of the reserve under the present system of ten pelts for each trapper, ten pelts for each Indian belonging to the reserve, ten for his squaw and ten for each child.

The exact number of beavers trapped last year in the reserve is probably not known even to the Government, but in the district around Bear Island, where the Hudson Bay Company has operated a post for many years, and where the skins captured by the Ojibways, who make their headquarters there, are handled, it is safe to say that 2,000 pelts were turned over to the "Big Company" and the free traders that do a small business there during the trapping season.

This large amount of pelts, in addition to the thousands that were taken out of the northern and extreme western sections of the reserve has practically sounded the death-knell of the beaver in that section of Ontario, and experienced trappers claim that even with a closed season of five years, it is doubtful if the beaver will ever again be plentiful in the Temagami forest reserve. But, under any circumstances, they argue that the only possible way to bring the beaver back to the reserve is another tightening up of the game laws and proper supervision to see that they are enforced to the last letter.

While trapping was largely responsible for these deplorable affairs, the coupon system that the Ontario Government put into effect with the object of securing a bounty of 50 cents on each pelt, is certainly not an arrangement calculated to help the beaver propagate its race. The trapper pays $5 for his license and receives ten coupons to be placed upon the ten pelts that he is entitled to take out in a season. On the other hand, any Indian that belongs to the reserve does not need to take out a license and is permitted to kill ten beaver for himself, ten for his squaw and ten for each of his children. To make matters better, or worse, as the case may be, race suicide is not popular among the "haughty redmen."

This system might not be of such a devastating nature if adhered to, but, of course, there is a "slicker in the woodpile." Free traders put the coupons on the skins bartered by the Indians. It means that the Indian can kill as many as they like, as there is only the trader to check them up and he is not going to "pass anything by." Here is another loophole in the law, by which the trapper can take his furs to the trader, who will put Indian coupons on them. Then the trapper can go back to the bush with his ten original coupons intact. He can repeat this as many times as he is fortunate enough to secure ten pelts, and then finish up the season by bringing out another ten pelts, on which he places his own coupons.

Many beavers are also purchased direct from the Indians by tourists and hunters, and this helps to swell the killing. The Government loses its bounty of 50c on these pelts, and the trapper in many cases sells for more than he would have secured had he turned the pelts over to the Hudson Bay Company or the free traders.

A quick way of blotting out a colony of beavers is to break a hole in the dam, insert a net in the opening, and then smash in the houses. They will immediately endeavor to escape through the aperture in the dam and get tangled in the net, when a blow on the head finishes their short career on mother earth.

Summing it up, there are so many ways of killing the beavers that they have not a chance in a thousand to escape. Sometimes they are fortunate enough to erect their house on the river bank, and as the water goes down it leaves an opening between its surface and the ice. This forms a supply of air, and once the beaver has escaped from the net, or from the trapper fence it in he is able to secure plenty of air under the ice. Under such conditions, he cannot be caught.

There will be a tremendous objection from certain quarters should the killing of beaver be prohibited in the Timagami forest reserve for at least five years, but if there are to be any beaver left in that part of the province a closed season of the above period is absolutely necessary.

The earliest coinage that can be called American was minted in the Bermudas in 1612.

FAMOUS LONDON CHORUS.

World's Biggest Choir Has Over One Thousand Members.

The Royal Choral Society has just over a thousand members, and is thus the largest as well as the most important choir in the world.

This famous choir used to be known simply as the Royal Albert Hall Choir, owing to the fact that its concerts were always given in that magnificent building. However, a few years ago the King, who is its patron, commanded that it should be renamed the Royal Choral Society, says a writer in London Tit-Bits.

The Duke of Connaught is the society's president, and Sir Frederick Bridge is leader of the choir. Mr. H. L. Balfour is its organist, and few musicians can control the Albert Hall's gigantic instrument as he does.

The immortal composer of "Faust" founded the choir in 1871. Then, after Gounod relinquished the leadership, the baton was taken over by the late Sir Joseph Barnby, the composer of many beautiful songs and works, who gave up a £5,000 a year post in order to have the honor of conducting the Royal Choral Society.

During Sir Joseph Barnby's leadership, Sir John Stainer presided at the organ, and his son, Dr. Stainer, is the husband of the present leader's youngest daughter. Sir Frederick Bridge became leader of the choir about 17 years ago.

Each member of the choir receives a free ticket for all concerts and a pass that admits a friend to rehearsals. The members are not paid, and it is considered a great honor to be accepted by this charmed choral circle after having passed the stiff sight-reading and singing tests held by Sir Frederick Bridge.

Every Monday evening during the season a rehearsal is held at the Albert Hall, and it is then that Sir Frederick Bridge gives vent to his humorous sallies.

One evening, during a rehearsal of the oratorio "Israel," a number of members' friends in the stalls were fidgeting and disturbing Sir Frederick.

He turned round once or twice and looked reprovingly at the offenders, but still they rustled and chattered. Then Sir Frederick stopped again and looked in their direction with a severe frown. At that the disturbers of his peace got up and walked towards an exit.

"Now," said Sir Frederick, tapping his desk with his baton, "let us start again at the line: 'And Israel was glad at their departing!'"

A delightful illustration of his humor is provided by a parody of the famous ballad, "Sally in Our Alley," which he wrote and called "Labby in Our Abbey." He sang it at a choir dinner in 1902. The parody was written when Mr. Labouchere, the well-known journalist and editor of Truth, lived in a house near Westminster Abbey. The last verse was as follows:

"The Ministers and members all
Made game of truthful Labby,
Though but for him 'tis said they'd be
A sleepy set and flabby.
And when their seven long years are out
They hope to bury Labby;
Ah! then how peacefully he'll lie,
But not in our Abbey."

A picturesque feature of the Royal Choral Society is that on concert nights each lady member wears a wide silk sash across her shoulders. Those on the right of the organ wear bright blue from the left shoulder; those on the left, bright red from the right shoulder. These sashes are worn thus in order to form a large V in honor of Queen Victoria.

Australian Small Notes.

Though the 10-shilling note has become popular in Australia no attempt has been made to introduce a medium of exchange equivalent to the dollar bill. The high cost of silver, however, is rendering it prohibitive for coinage purposes, unless a durable ringing coin difficult to counterfeit can be produced with a small percentage of silver. While the Commonwealth mint is endeavoring to solve the problem of percentage everything is in readiness for the immediate issue of five-shilling bank notes by the Federal Treasury. There is no apparent reason why these notes should not become popular at once and restrict the use of silver to the half crown and smaller denominations, though again, nickel coinage is likely to supersede silver even there.

House of Coutts Distinguishes

WITH the approaching merger of one of the historic English banking houses of Messrs. Coutts & Co. with the National Provincial and Union Bank of England disappears the name of an institution which for more than two centuries has been foremost in international finance. For, directly or indirectly, the house of Coutts has been associated in that period with every event which affected the welfare of Europe and her peoples.

From the days of the Georges, Coutts & Co. have been bankers to the royal family of England and to most of the nobility. And until 1904, when they moved to new quarters, their dingy old brick house in the Strand, near Norfolk street, was one of the landmarks for sightseers.

The family of Coutts, stretching back in unbroken sequence for 500 years, is of ancient Scottish stock. With up to the middle of the seventeenth century had been of Auchintoul, until one of its members in 1650 started business as a note broker and exchange banker at Melrose.

It was in 1690 that John Campbell, born in Auchintoul, was carrying on a small banking business at the sign of the Three Crowns. He built the house which was to remain the headquarters of the firm for 214 years. Upon his death in 1712 his partner, George Middleton, assumed the management of the business, aided by the younger Campbells, until, in 1742, they were joined by James Coutts, son of John Coutts, a financier who had attained the position of Lord Provost of Edinburgh.

James Coutts had already established a London branch of the Middleton business in Middleton, in 1747. With the retirement of the last of the Campbells in 1760, James Coutts became sole manager and took into partnership his younger brother, Thomas, greatest in a long line of brilliant financiers, and known to all his time as the "shabby little man in the threadbare suit." It was with Thomas that the real eventful history of the bank begins.

Few men have enjoyed the unbroken success of Thomas Coutts, or worked harder to attain it. Few men possessed, as he did the magnetic quality which wins friendship alike in high and low places.

His eccentricities of dress and manner—always a gentleman's manner, however—have been the subject of innumerable stories.

In the height of his power, when he had become financial agent or almoner to half of fashionable London, he was the guest of the Prince of Wales, afterward George IV., at the Pavilion Brighton. Early one summer morning Thomas Coutts, in his rusty brown suit, with stockings that hung loosely around his legs, took his seat according to his custom on a bench in the little park outside the pavilion. A benevolent old lady out for her morning walk noticed a very shabby and very old man [illegible] and [illegible]

"My dear m[illegible]" said, "you have plainly seen better days. Pray accept a trifle for a breakfast." And she handed him a note for ten shillings on his own bank.

Then she added, "I will see you here again to-day, and shall raise a subscription for you among my friends."

Mr. Coutts, with a courtly bow, thanked his benefactress and assured her that he would certainly be on hand by the same bench at dinner time.

Then he returned to the pavilion, but in the course of the dinner managed to slip away and get back to the park bench.

Presently the old lady appeared again, this time accompanied by a party of friends.

"There he is," she said. "There is the poor old fellow for whom I asked your aid."

"That old man," answered one of her guests. "Why, he is Mr. ——."

But before he could utter the name the Prince of Wales came out of the pavilion and slapping Coutts on the back, said: "Tom Coutts, you old rascal, we've fined you a bottle for leaving your glass."

Mr. Coutts' benefactress was overwhelmed with embarrassment. But her equilibrium was restored when, two days later, she received by messenger a parcel containing a superb diamond necklace, with this little note:

"A tribute of remembrance to the sweet and gracious lady who befriended a poor old man."

Coutts was already the richest man in England and the confidant of monarchs and statesmen, when, ignoring the palpable advances of the many titled ladies who would have been willing to share his fortune, he suddenly married Elizabeth Starky, a handsome rustic girl who had been housemaid in his brother's home, his only expressed reason being that he had seen her grow up from childhood and she was sensible and good as well as beautiful.

Mr. Coutts' eldest daughter became the wife of an earl, the second, Frances, became Marchioness of Bute, and the youngest, Sophie, was married to Sir Francis Burdett, famous in the politics of the day.

At his wife's death he married Harriet Mellon, and to her he bequeathed the whole of his fortune of $4,500,000 in the full assurance that she would dispose of it with wisdom, justice and generosity." Five years later his widow became the Duchess of St. Albans. But that Thomas Coutts confidence in her innate nobility of character was not misplaced was shown when, on her death in 1837, ten years later, she made the daughter of Sir Francis Burdett her sole heiress, thus giving back to the Coutts family the fortune she had received from it.

Testing the Minister's Faith.

A little Scotch lad greatly coveted a fine Jersey cow belonging to the minister of the local kirk.

"Do you believe in prayer?" said the good little boy to the minister.

"Most certainly I do," was the reply.

"But," insisted the questioner, "do you believe if I prayed hard enough God would give me a cow like yours?"

"Certainly, if you had equally good reasons for possessing a cow, and your faith was sufficiently strong."

"Then," came the immediate rejoinder, "you give me your cow and you pray for another."—Tit-Bits.

Mothers' Advice

The responsibility for a daughter's future largely rests with the mother. The right influence and the information which is of vital interest to the daughter imparted at the proper time has not only saved the life but insured the success of many a beautiful girl. When a girl's thoughts become sluggish with headaches, dizziness, or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower abdomen and a desire for solitude, her mother should come to her aid and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, will at this time prepare the system for the coming change and start this trying period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities. Thousands of women residing in every part of the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtues of this medicine, and what it has done for their daughters.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound enough for what it has done for my daughter. She was 15 years of age, very sickly and pale and she had to stay home from school most of the time. She suffered agonies from backache and dizziness and was without appetite. For 3 months she was under the doctor's care and got no better, always complaining about her back and side aching so I did not know what to do. I read in the papers about your wonderful medicine and I made my mind to try it. She has taken five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and doesn't complain any more with her back and side aching. She has gained in weight and feels much better. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all mothers and daughters."—Mrs. M. Fiscus, 515 Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Chinese Labor in Samoa Makes Serious Problem For the New Zealanders

THE problem with which the New Zealand Government is faced in western Samoa, in the matter of Chinese labor, is one of peculiar complexity. Samoa, under German rule, was subjected to the exploitation everywhere characteristic of the German colonial policy. Copra, rubber, cacao, kapoc, in fact, all the tropical products, can readily be grown on the islands, but the Samoan has not the least desire to grow them; and nothing, so it would seem, will prevail upon him to produce them, or assist in their production, beyond the amounts necessary to supply his very scanty needs. Even the Germans, apparently, could not overcome his reluctance to undertake continuous manual work, and so they proceeded to import coolies from China, in large numbers, and on the indenture system.

When the New Zealand Government, as mandatory, took over the mandate and fell heir to the German plantations, it was faced with the alternative of either continuing this system of indentured labor or abandoning the plantations. For the Samoans refused to work, and white labor was impossible. The Government decided on a compromise. When the New Zealand troops took over the colony there were some 2,000 coolies engaged on the plantations; of these about 2,000 were allowed to return to China as their indentures expired; but the Government decided to continue the system, with the provision that the number of indentured laborers should never exceed 1,000.

Now the question of indentured labor is one which is constantly coming up for judgment in various parts of the world, from the point of view both of its morality and of its value. There is a wide divergence of opinion on both issues. But there can be no doubt whatever that there is a growing tendency to condemn the practice, no matter how carefully the interests of the laborer are apparently safeguarded. It was just about fourteen years ago that the question of Chinese labor in South Africa was so largely instrumental in bringing about the overwhelming Conservative defeat in Great Britain, at the general election held in that year, and no British statesman has dared to advocate "Chinese slavery," as it was characterized, since. Then, early in 1916, Lord Hardinge, at that time Viceroy of India, pronounced himself emphatically in favor of abolishing the system of Indian indentured labor in such centres as Jamaica, Trinidad, British Guinea, Fiji, and Dutch Surinam; whilst any proposal to revive it is sure to call forth a flood of protest from many quarters.

This is just what is happening in New Zealand at the present time. The New Zealand Labor Party will have none of indentured labor in Samoa. It is quite in vain for the Government to contend that Samoan labor is not available at the present time; that the Samoans have yet to be educated to the necessity of work; that such education is being undertaken; but that, in the meantime, the necessary workers must be imported; and that whilst the natives are idling they are actually "going short of necessities, such as an adequate water supply." Labor, at once, comes back with the retort that indentured labor is a form of slavery; and that if the Samoans do not want to work as industrialists on plantations, "to make money for white owners," why should New Zealand attempt to force them to do so? "They are quite happy if they are left alone." The Government at Wellington may reply with all manner of carefully reasoned argument, but New Zealand labor, and a very large public opinion in New Zealand, remains entirely unconvinced. Already labor is fighting an election on the issue, and altogether it would seem as if the Government would be compelled to find some other solution of the question than the present one. That a satisfactory solution can be found cannot, of course, be denied. The mining industry of the Rand did not come to an end on the day that the last of the Chinese coolies was returned to China.

Code Tipped Wife to Rum Fines.

Saginaw, April 6—Albert Wagar, of Detroit, told the circuit judge that he was given liquor by a man in Canada and told to carry it across to the States and bury it. This was his explanation of finding of nine gallons of whiskey in secret compartments in a roadster he brought here from Detroit. Wagar was fined $400.00. Finding of a code in Wagar's pocket, and other evidence, led the judge to express the opinion that Wagar was engaged in the business of selling liquor. The code, evidently to keep his wife posted as to good or bad fortune is interpreted as follows: "Baby is sick, $200 fine; Baby is worse, $300 fine; Baby is worse yet, $500 fine; Baby is better, acquittal." In addition to the $400 fine, which Wagar expects to pay, his automobile was confiscated by the state, making his total loss about $1,000.

Death of Mrs. Wm. Davy.

The death of Mrs. Wm. Davy took place on Friday morning last, March 26th, at her home in Pelatt township, at the age of 66 years. She contracted influenza early in January and had been in poor health ever since. During the past couple of weeks she appeared to be improving and was able to be up. Friday morning her daughter thought she was sleeping very soundly and went to her side and found that she had passed away in her sleep a short time before. With her husband she came to this district from Napanee eleven years ago and they have resided on the farm in Pelatt for some years. She was a member of the Salvation Army, and when in town took an active part in their work. Besides her husband she leaves three daughters, Mrs. Edward Loucks, of Napanee, Ont., who was with her when she died; Mrs. Wm. Hicks, of Transcona; and Mrs. Capt. Oliverd, an officer of the Salvation Army at Webb City, Missouri; also two brothers, Wm. and Samuel Ellis, of Northbrook, Renfrew Miner and News, March 31st.

Tractor Delivery.

One of the greatest displays took place on Saturday, April 10th, from the garage of Hartman & Card, when a tractor delivery of nine 8 x 16 International Tractors were lined up in front of the garage, being equipped with tractor plows, disc harrows, and cultivators. The purchasers of these machines, Messrs. Wm. Baird, Thomas Gould, Darius Smith, John Snook, I. N. Asselstine, T. M. Asselstine, Arthur McKnight, Thos. Chapman and Frank [illegible] each drove [illegible] the way each [illegible] their machines in the parade, as some of them had never sat on the seat of one of them until that day, each man taking his tractor and machinery home that night without any difficulty which speaks well for the hardiness of these tractors. Farmers are progressing very favorably to-day under the new methods of farming, when production is needed so badly and much talked about. It is absolutely sure that farmers cannot produce the amount their farms would if they were to work in the old way when help is so hard to get. The day is not far away when there will be a tractor or mostly every farm. With a tractor one man will be able to do as much as three men with teams and also have their power for belt work. Great credit should be given to Messrs. Hartman & Card on the sale of so many tractors to help out the production as we understand they sold thirty of them last year.

Miss Herrington's Address to the I. O. D. E.

On Thursday afternoon, April 8th, Miss Herrington, now a nursing sister at Sydenham Military Hospital, very kindly came up from Kingston to address the "U. E. Loyalist" Chapter of the I.O.D.E. giving the members and their friends a very graphic account of her experience in France, which was illustrated with excellent views of the scenes described, commanding the close attention of an interested gathering. Miss Herrington brought very vividly before her audience the many privations which the nursing sisters were of necessity called upon to endure in the early days of their service in France; also the wonderful care bestowed upon patients and the self-sacrificing work which was a part of the daily life of our nurses on active service. It may nothing of the great courage displayed by these same women when the enemy bombed the hospitals. It is a satisfaction to know that the nursing sisters who were subjected to these cruel raids, and showed such a fine sense of duty, were later rewarded by the bestowal upon them at Buckingham Palace of the Military Medal at the hands of His Majesty the King. It is well known that Miss Herrington was one of those so honored. The "U. E. L." Chapter of the I.O.D.E. feel much indebted to the guest of the afternoon for the very interesting story of her experiences and also to W. S. Herrington for his kindness in arranging the lanten and showing the slides, as well as to the C. M. B. A., the I. O. O. F., and A. M. & A. F., and to the Hydro-Electric Co. for favors granted. Sincere appreciation is also felt for the kindness of the Masonic body in loaning their lantern.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY BENEFITS

Sickness Disability Benefits $111,065.68; Death Benefits $19,991.97; Accident Disability Benefits $15,016.53; Pensions $6,109.-28—these are some of the payments made for the year 1919 from the Employees' Benefit Fund of the Bell Telephone Company.

The Benefit Fund Committee's report just published is an interesting document. It shows gross payments to employees from the benefit fund in 1919 of $158,602.-02.

"During the year," says the report, "there was a total of 1,665 sickness cases in which benefits were paid. This is 523 cases less than in 1918. The total days of disability was 68,488 days during 1919—only 273 days less than in 1918—which indicates that the sickness cases in 1919 were of longer duration, and that in the large number of influenza cases which helped to swell the total in 1918, the absence was of a very short duration. In 1918, with 2,188 sickness cases, $102,962.67 was paid in benefits. In 1919, with only 1,665 sickness cases, $111,065.68 was paid in benefits. The increase is due to the higher average wage of employees."

In accordance with the recommendation of the committee, the company now has established Medical Department in connection with Employees' Pension and Benefit Plan, and Dr. G. A. Winters has been appointed to take charge of it as "Medical Adviser," with headquarters at Montreal. Dr. Winters will review all medical certificates and medical examination forms.

It is the intention of the company to inaugurate some form of physical or medical examination of new employees. It is considered that such precaution is very desirable, both for the protection of the employees already in the service and to ensure new employees being given work for which they are physically fitted. Should such examination disclose minor ailments or a tendency thereto, the new employee would be made aware of the conditions and advised to consult his or her physician, in order that early treatment might prevent the ailment becoming serious. Valuable and disinterested advice has already been given to employees through this channel.

The fund, which now stands at $500,000, is maintained by the company without contributions of any kind from the employees.

A Picturesque Home.

In contrast to the many charms of Cape Breton's rugged scenery are its placid fresh water pools, which are separated from the sea by a few yards of beach and low bank. These lonely waters are frequented by wild ducks, and the fishes are safe from the prowling tourist.

Within a few minutes walk of each other are three of these ponds, all owned by Dr. Alexander Graham Bell and his family. Each pond has a distinct interest of its own. The first is walled by a steep, and densely wooded hill, and the fleecy clouds are reflected in its dark depths, while in a shady corner is a patch of white water lilies.

On the edge of the middle pond is moored a house boat which is fitted with modern comforts, and is the retreat of Dr. Bell when he wishes to meditate in seclusion. Here ends a line of telephone which winds through the forest connecting its inventor with his home on the point. On the sea beach, in front of the house boat we saw several harmless brown snakes enjoying the sunny solitude. Round this pond which harbors the boat, a rustic path winds into the woods and up the mountain, sometimes crossed by one of the innumerable rills which feed the ponds.

The third pond differs in scenic grandeur from the other two. In the background a lofty white cliff stands like a sentinel over the stillness. It is called Lot's Wife.

Tiny streams of the overflow trickle across the beach into the Great Bras d'Or which is really an arm of the Atlantic, for Cape Breton is an island into which the ocean drives its great tentacles where they are called lakes. One arm, the Strait of Canso, embraces the island, thus severing it from the mainland of Nova Scotia.

Brown Bear and Grizzlies.

The law protects the great brown bear of the Alaskan peninsula and nearby islands, which is the largest existing carnivorous land animal; likewise the grizzlies of the Arctic territory.

Nevertheless they are shot whenever the natives or white settlers get a chance at them, and if anybody is arrested for such an offence a conviction cannot be obtained. This is because public sentiment in Alaska is dead against the beasts in question, which are not only destroyers of livestock but dangerous to human beings.

The popular notion that a grizzly will not attack a man if unmolested is without basis in fact. Most formidable of living creatures, it is very intelligent, recognizes human beings as its enemies and will assail them whenever a good opportunity offers. A grizzly has been known to follow a man's trail, steal up behind him and tear off the whole top of his head with a blow of its tremendous paw.

Alaskan settlers declare that the great brown and grizzly bears are protected for the sole benefit of non-resident sportsmen. But they add that they are entitled to protect themselves, and they do it with a gun.

GREAT POWER PLANTS

STRIKING FEATURES OF WORK BY ENGINEERS.

Queenston-Chippewa Power Development Is Well Under Way and One Interesting Detail Is the Reversal of the Flow of the Welland River —Power Will Be Available Next Year.

SOME novel features mark the new Queenston-Chippewa power development on the Canadian side of the Niagara river, now well under way. One detail is the reversal of the flow of the Welland river, whose present mouth, where it runs into the Niagara, will become an intake. Niagara water will flow up the Welland for four miles and a half, and then through a nine-mile canal to Queenston at the edge of the cliff that marks the limit of the present Niagara gorge and the site of the falls in a former geologic age. Here will be the power plant, utilizing a fall of over three hundred feet to the level of Lake Ontario. The horse-power developed will be 300,000, but not all of it can be used without shutting down some of the power in the older Canadian plants. Otherwise, the limit of flow assigned to Canada by international agreement would be exceeded. Our quotations are from an article in the Engineering News-Record (New York), which we quote and condense:

"Work on the new hydro-electric development at Niagara Falls, which the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario started in 1918, is progressing at an expected rate of speed. Some little difficulty has been met in holding the slope in the deep cuts in the earth overburden, but this has not caused serious retardation, and the prospect now is that power will be available in 1921.

"As at present designed, the plant will develop 100,000 horse-power with a flow of 10,000 cubic feet per second or a development of 20 horse-power for each cubic foot per second. The old Niagara river power plants developed from 12 to 15 horse-power per second-foot, the new Ontario Power Company's development on the Canadian side about 17, and the new Hydraulic Power Company's development on the American side about 20.

"The project comprises four and one-half miles of river canalization and nine miles of power-canal dug in the dry. The river canalization is in the Welland river, whose direction will be reversed from its present mouth up to the canal intake where the control works will be built. The canal extends across high land beyond the Niagara gorge to the power-house, which will be built at the foot of the gorge at the river elevation. Water will be delivered to the power-house by penstocks laid on the slope of the bluff.

"The river-channel section is being excavated by dredge and cable-way, to provide sufficient waterway. Canal excavation is largely through rock with a heavy earth overburden. The first one and a quarter miles of the canal just beyond the river is in earth section; the remainder is in rock with the exception of a short earth section opposite the Whirlpool, where an old gorge, probably a former bed of the Niagara river, drops the rock bottom 50 deep as to make it impossible to found the canal on rock.

"At a distance of about 2,400 feet from the river the canal widens out into a forebay 1,000 feet long and 300 feet wide at the intake gate. The penstocks are of riveted steel plates 14 feet in diameter and about 450 feet in length and extend down the steep bank of the gorge and the river from the forebay to the power-house. No surge tanks or standpipes will be required.

"The work at present may be divided into that on the river, that on the canal proper, and that on the power-house. In the Welland river a dredge is working up from the mouth of the Niagara river and has reached the Michigan Central Railway bridge, about a half mile from the mouth. This dipper dredge is spoiling into scows which are being towed out into the Niagara river and dumped. A cableway excavator farther up the river has done a certain amount of work, but is now operating at full capacity. Between 2,000,000 and 4,000,000 cubic yards of earth is the total excavation in the river. About one-quarter of this has been removed.

"The larger part of the work in the canal has been done, beginning at the forebay end. The forebay itself is practically completed and channelers and drills are working in the rock cut between the forebay and the end of the earth overburden excavation. The construction railway is completed, all except a short section at the upper end and is in operation carrying trains of earth and rock cars to the spoil dump, which is on a spur two miles to the west of the canal-line.

"Two of the big concrete bridges, those carrying the St. Catharines and Thorold Railway and that carrying the Wabash Railway, are completed. The twin bridges carrying the Grand Trunk and the Michigan Central are under way, the foundations being all done at this time. At the power-house site the whole face of the cliff has been stript and a construction railway is being built down to the river edge from a connection to the main-line road, about a mile below the power-house site. A steam-shovel has been worked along about fifty feet above the river level and is engaged in excavating the power-house site."

WAS FORCED TO QUIT HIS WORK

Winnipeg Man Gains Fifteen Pounds and Is Back On Job Every Day, Now.

"My work was more than I could stand and I had to give it up, but since taking Tanlac I have gained fifteen pounds and am every bit as strong all day long without the least trouble," said A. J. De Grusenaere, of 181 Dubuc St., Winnipeg, a few days ago. Mr. De Grusenaere served for three years with the Canadian expeditionary forces in France where he received the Distinguished Conduct Medal; he is now employed in the government shops at Transcona.

"It was nearly a year ago that my health failed," continued Mr. De Grusenaere, "and I kept going down hill until I became almost a physical wreck. Nothing satisfied good to me and my appetite was so poor that I ate hardly enough to keep me going. My stomach was terribly upset, and for hours after every meal I was so bloated up with gas that I felt miserable. My heart palpitated so bad I could hardly stand it and at times I was so weak I could not lift my sledge hammer. I had a continued pain right between my shoulder blades and often it was so severe I had to stop in my work and draw my shoulders up hard to try and ease it. My sleep was restless and I would be wide awake for hours at a time even though I was exhausted when I went to bed. I got up of mornings so weak and worn-out I just had to drak myself off to work. Finally I gave out completely and had to quit work.

"I had heard so many of the boys down at the shop talking about Tanlac that I decided to try it. Well, sir, it has fixed me up the finest kind and now I am back at my work and never miss a day. My appetite is fine and I can eat three big meals a day and never suffer one bit afterwards. I don't have that bloated feeling any more and my heart action is normal and regular. The pain between my shoulder blades has left me and when I go to bed at night I sleep like a log. My strength and energy have come back and, as I said, I have picked up fifteen pounds in weight and just go about feeling fine all the time."

Who Bottomley Is.

Horatio Bottomley, the energetic editor of John Bull, the London weekly, whose savage onslaughts upon the American nation were considered of sufficient importance to cable, has an unequaled capacity for getting in the limelight and ingenuity in keeping himself there. Bottomley made a fortune out of the Australian mining craze of 1895, went into jouts and at length established John Bull, of which periodical he has remained the editor.

He founded the Financial Times then became proprietor of the Sun of London and Twice—in 1893 and again in 1909 —he was the defendant in a case brought against him by the crown, and, successfully conducting his own case in both instances, became generally regarded as the best "lay lawyer" in the country; at least he makes that claim for himself in the autobiography which he furnished the English "Who's Who." He also claims in that autobiography to be the founder of the modern co-operative movement, but the Rochdale system founders probably would dispute that claim with him. He was a member of Parliament for a good many years and is the owner of some well-known race horses.

His anti-Americanism is well established. Last December he urged the Entente to disregard the United States and to occupy Berlin in order to require full compliance with the terms of the peace treaty. "Let us wipe Germany off the map," was his advice. He has a grudge against Lloyd George because, according to him, the latter "accepted Wilson as a guide rather than Clemenceau" at the peace negotiations.

Some of Mr. Bottomley's contemporaries have compared him with P. T. Barnum and others have said that he is American in some of his traits.

INDIA GETS HOME RULE.

First Step Toward Self-Government Known as a Diarchy.

No matter how the sun comes up there are always weather-wise prophets who see signs of a dismal day; and not a few such augurs, we are told, watched with due foreboding the passing of the bill giving a measure of self-government to India. But its passage "ends the old era and starts a new one," to use the words of its sponsor, the Right Hon. Edwin Samuel Montagu, Secretary of State for India.

The centre of the scheme of the measure, as the London Times points out, is a diarchy by which there is a division of governmental responsibility between a nominated executive council and ministers chosen from an elected legislative body. The new system provides bicameral legislatures, which are only partly popular, for India as a whole and for certain provinces. The Indian Legislative Assembly will consist of about one hundred members, of whom two-thirds are elected. Of the appointed members, one-third will be made up of non-officials and representatives of special minority interests. The upper chamber will contain sixty members, of whom not more than one-third will be officials. The arrangement for Provincial Legislatures will be virtually the same. Diarchy, or twin authority, it is explained, shows itself in two ways. Some powers of government are reserved to the executive, some "transferred" to the legislatures; but the executive has virtually the decision in a conflict of authority or in case the legislature exercises its transferred powers against the common interest. The purpose of the measure is gradually to replace the system of bureaucratic administration with a system of representative government in which the representatives of the Indian electors will not only initiate policy and legislate, but will also control the officials charged with the task of carrying out that policy.

Sir Michael O'Dwyer, who, says the London Morning Post, is "universally regarded as the greatest living Indian administrator," represented the opinion of the Provincial Governments before the joint committee and laid down his objections to the dual system as follows:

"An Indian province needs a united government; and this gives it a divided government.

"An Indian province needs a strong government; and this gives it a weak one.

"An Indian province needs a government capable of prompt action; and this leads to delay and friction.

"An Indian province needs a simple system of government; and this involves extreme complexity.

"An Indian province needs a cheap system of government; and this involves a very costly one, with elaborate methods of taxation and finance which will certainly not make for economy.

"An Indian province needs a government which commands the confidence and loyalty and ties the services; and this tends to divide and disintegrate the services by making them serve two masters.

"An Indian province needs a government which secures good administration; and this gives power to a small section and endangers the interest of the masses."

"Cloth of Gold."

The statement recently circulated about a woman who wore a sable jacket worth at least two thousand guineas is not so extraordinary as it seems, for good dark single sable skins will almost always fetch from £20 to £40, and a cape of real sable, as Russian princes used to wear, may easily cost £1,000, says Tit-Bits.

But the nobles of the Province of Kherson presented to the late Empress of Russia some years ago an ermine mantle which was valued at £10,000. Silver fox skins are even dearer—at any rate, the price of a single skin in Paris was at one time £250 — and a famous explorer has recorded how, in Eastern Greenland, he met a girl wearing a dress composed wholly of silver fox skins. At Parisian prices this must have been worth quite £15,000.

There are said to be handkerchiefs of rare lace in existence worth £1,000 each, and real "cloth of gold," made of real gold drawn into fine wire and then woven by hand, is only nowadays obtainable in Sumatra at £40 a yard.

CHAPTER IX.

Action.

I had seen, close in shore, a two-masted schooner under full sail sweeping by, as if pursued, and three negroes kneeling on deck, with leveled rifles. As I looked, a shot rang out, from my right, where I could not see, and one of the negroes rolled over. Another shot, and the negro next him fell sprawling with his arms over the bulwark.

At that moment, two other negroes emerged from the cabin hatchway, half dragging and half carrying a woman. She was struggling bravely, but in vain. The negroes—evidently acting under orders of a white man, who stood over them with a revolver—were dragging her toward the main mast. Her head was bare, her hair in disorder, and one shoulder from which her dress had been torn in the struggle, gleamed white in the sunlight. Yet her eyes were flashing splendid scornful fires at her captors; and her laughter of defiance came ringing to me over the sea. It was then that I had cried "Calypso!" and wrenched myself free.

The next moment there came dashing in sight a sloop also under full canvas, and at its bow, a huge white man, with a leveled rifle that still smoked. At a glance, I knew him for Charlie Webster. He had been about to fire again, but, as the man dragged Calypso for'ard, he paused, calm as a rock, waiting, with his keen sportsman's eyes on Tobias—for, of course, it was he.

"You—coward!" I heard his voice roar across the rapidly diminishing distance between the two boats, for the sloop was running with power as well as sails.

Meanwhile, the men had lashed Calypso to the mast, and even in my agony my eyes recaled the glory of her beauty as she stood proudly there —the great sails spread above her, and the sea for her background.

"Now, do your worst," cried Tobias, his evil face white as wax in the sunlight.

"Fire, fire—don't be afraid," rang out Calypso's voice, like singing gold.

"Now, Do Your Worst!" Cried Tobias.

At the same instant, as she called Tobias sprang toward her with raised revolver.

"Another word, and I fire," shouted the voice of the brute.

But the rifle that never missed its mark spoke again. Tobias' arm fell shattered, and he staggered away screaming. Still once more, Charlie Webster's gun spoke, and the staggering figure fell with a crash on the deck.

"Now, boys, ready," I heard Charlie's voice roar out again, as the sloop tore alongside the schooner—where the rest of the negro crew with raised arms had fallen on their knees, crying for mercy.

All this I saw from the water, as I swam wildly toward the two boats, which now had closed on each other, a mass of thundering canvas, and screaming and cursing men—and Calypso there, like a beautiful statue, still lashed to the mast, a proud smile on her lovely lips.

Another moment, and Charlie had sprung aboard, and, seizing a knife from one of the screaming negroes, he cut her free.

His deep calm voice came to me over the water.

"That's what I call courage," he said. "I could never have done it."

The "king" had been right. He knew his daughter.

By this I was nearing the boats, though as yet no one had seen me. They were all too busy with the confusion on deck, where four men lay dead, and three others still kept up their gibberish of fear.

I saw Calypso and Charlie Webster stand a moment looking down at the figure of Tobias, prostrate at their feet.

"I am sorry I had to kill him," I heard Charlie's deep growl. "I meant to keep him for the hangman."

But suddenly I saw him start forward and stamp heavily on something.

"No, you don't." I heard him roar—and I learned afterward that Tobias, though mortally wounded, was not yet dead, and that, as the two had stood looking down on him, they had seen his hand furtively moving toward the fallen revolver that lay a few inches from him on the deck. Just as he had grasped it, Charlie's heavy boot had come down on his wrist. But Tobias was still game.

"Not alive, you English brute!" he was heard to groan out, and, snatching free his wrist too swiftly to be prevented, he had gathered up all his remaining strength, and hurled himself over the side into the sea.

I was but a dozen yards away from him, as he fell; and, as he rose again, it was for his dying eyes to fix with a glare upon me. They dilated with terror, as though he had seen a ghost.

Then he gave one strange scream, and fell back into the sea, and we saw him no more.

* * * * * *

It will be easier for the reader to imagine, than for me to describe, the look on the faces of Calypso and Charlie Webster when they saw me appear at almost the same spot where poor Tobias had just gone bubbling down. Words I had none, for I was at the end of my strength, and I broke down and sobbed like a child.

"Thank God you are safe—my treasure, my treasure!" was all I could say, after they had lifted me aboard, and I lay face down on the deck, at her feet. Swiftly she knelt by my side, and caressed my shoulder with her dear hand.

All of which—particularly my reference to "my treasure"—must have been much to the bewilderment of the good simple-hearted Charlie, towering, innocent-eyed, above us. I believe I stayed a little longer at her feet than I really had need to, for the comfort of her being so near and kind; but, presently, we were all aroused by a voice from the cliffs above. It was the "king," with his bodyguard, Erebus and the crew of the whaling-boat, Samson, alas! The sound of the firing had reached them in the woods, and they had come hurrying to discover its cause.

So we deferred asking our questions, and telling our several stories, till we were pulled ashore.

As Calypso was folded in her father's arms, he turned to me:

"Didn't I tell you that I knew my daughter?" he said.

"And I told you something too, O king," I replied—my eyes daring at last to rest on Calypso with the love and pride of my heart.

"And where on earth have you been, young man?" he asked, laughing. "Did Tobias kidnap you too?"

It was very hard, as you will have seen, to astonish the "king."

But, though it was hard to astonish and almost impossible to alarm him, his sense of wonder was quite another matter, and the boyish delight with which he listened to our several stories would have made it worth while to undergo tenfold the perils we had faced. Our stories, said the "king," were quite in the manner of "The Arabian Nights," dovetailing one into the other.

"And now," he added, "we will begin with the 'Story of the Murdered Slave and the Scared Lady.'"

Calypso told her story simply and in a few words. The first part of it, of which the poor murdered Samson had been the eloquent witness, needed no further telling. He had done his brave best—poor fellow—but Tobias had had six men with him, and it was soon over. Her they had gagged and bound and carried in a sort of improvised sedan chair; Tobias had done the thing with a certain style and—she had to admit—with absolute courtesy.

When they had gone a mile or two from the house, he had had the gag taken from her mouth, and, on her promise not to attempt to escape (which was, of course, quite impossible) he had also had her unbound, so that her hurried journey through the woods was made as comfortable as possible.

They were making, she had gathered —and as we had surmised—for the northern shore, and, after about a three hours' march, she heard the sound of the sea. On the schooner she had found a cabin all nicely prepared for her—even dainty toilet necessaries —and an excellent dinner was served, on some quite pretty china, to her alone. Poor Tobias had seemed bent on showing—as he had said to Tom—that he was not the "carrion" we had thought him.

After dinner, Tobias had respectfully asked leave for a few words with her. He had apologized for his action, but explained that it was necessary—the only way he had left, he said, of protecting his own interests, and safeguarding a treasure which belonged to him and no one else, if it belonged to any living man. It had seemed to her that it was a monomania with him.

While he had been talking, she had made up her mind what she would do. She would tell him the plain truth about her doubloons, and offer him what remained of them as a ransom. This she did, and was able at last half to persuade him that, so far as anyone knew, that was all the treasure there was, and then the digging among the ruins of the old house was a mere fancy of her father's. There might be something there or not—and she was not so far as to give her word of honor that, if anything was found, he should have his share of it.

Tobias had seemed impressed, and promised his answer in the morning, leaving her to sleep—with a sentry at her cabin door. She had slept soundly, and awakened only at dawn. As soon as she was up, Tobias had come to her, saying that he had accepted her offer, and asking her to direct him to her treasure.

This she had done, and, to avoid passing the settlement, they had taken the course round the eastern end of the island. As they had approached the cave (and here Calypso turned a quizzical smile on me, which no one, of course, understood but ourselves), a sloop was seen approaching them from the westward . . . and here she stopped and turned to Charlie Webster.

"Now," said the "king," "we shall hear the story of Apollo—or, let us say, rather Ajax—the Far-Darter—he of the arrow that never missed its mark."

And Charlie Webster, more at home with deeds than words, blushed and blushed through his part of the story, telling how—having called at the settlement—he had got our message from Sweeney, and was making up the coast for the hidden creek. He had spied what he felt sure was Tobias' schooner—had called on him "in the king's name" to surrender—("I had in my pocket the warrant for his arrest," said Charlie, with innocent pride—"the d—d scoundrel") but had been answered with bullets. He had been terribly frightened, he owned, when Calypso had been brought on deck, but she had given him courage—he paused to beam on her, a broad-faced admiration, for which he could find no words —and, as he had never yet missed a flying duck at—I forget how many yards Charlie mentioned—well . . . perhaps he oughtn't to have risked it.

And so his story came to an end, amid reassuring applause.

"Now," said the "king," "for the Story of the Disappearing Gentleman and the Lighted Lantern."

And then I told my story as it is already known to the reader, and I have to confess that, when I came to the chestful of doubloons and pieces of eight, I had a very attentive audience. The "king" was for starting off that very night. But, reminded of the difficult seclusion in which the treasure still lay, he was persuaded to wait till the morrow.

"At dawn then," he said, "tomorrow —what time, the rosy-footed dawn' . . . so be it. And now I am going to talk to Ajax the Far-Darter of duck shooting."

"But wait!" I cried. "Why did 'Jack Harkaway' go to Nassau?"

Calypso blushed. The "king" chuckled.

"I prefer not to be known in Nassau, yet some of my business has to be done there. Nor is it safe for beauty like Calypso's to go unprotected. So from time to time, Jack Harkaway goes for us both! And now enough of explanations!" and he launched into talk of game and sport in various parts of the world, to the huge delight of the great simple-hearted Charlie.

But, after a time, other matters claimed the attention of his other auditors. During the flow of his discourse night had fallen. Calypso and I perceived that we were forgotten—so, by an impulse that seemed to be one, we rose and left them there, and stole out into the garden where the little fountain was dancing like a spirit under the moon, and the orange trees gave out their perfume on the night breeze. I took her hand, and we walked softly out into the moonlight, and looked down at the closed lotuses in the little pool. And then I took courage to look into each other's eyes.

"Calypso," I said, "when are you going to show me where you keep your doubloons?"—and I added, in a whisper, "Jack—am I going to see you in boy's clothes again?"

And, with that, she was in my arms, and I felt her heart beating against my own.

"Oh! my treasure," I said—ever so softly—"Calypso, my treasure."

POSTSCRIPT.

Now, such readers as have been "gentle" enough to follow me so far in my story, may possibly desire to be told what lay behind those other locked doors in the underground gallery where I so nearly laid my bones.

Those caverns, we afterward discovered, did actually communicate with Blackbeard's ruined mansion, and the "king," who has now rebuilt that mansion and lives in it in semifeudal state with Calypso and me, is able to pass from one to the other by underground passages which are an unfailing source of romantic satisfaction to his dear, absurd soul.

As to whether or not the mansion and the treasure were actually Blackbeard's—that is, Edward Teach's—we are yet in doubt, though we prefer to believe that they were. At all events, we never found any evidence to connect them at all with Henry P. Tobias.

Those second treasure, we have every reason to think, still remains undiscovered.

As for the sinister and ill-fated Henry P. Tobias, Jr., we have since learned—through Charlie Webster, who every now and again drops in with sailors from his sloop and carries off the "king" for duck hunting—that his real name was quite different; he must have assumed, as a nom de guerre, the name we knew him by, to give color to his claim. I am afraid, therefore, that he was a plain scoundrel, after all, though it seemed to me that I saw gleams in him of something better, and I shall always feel a sort of kindness toward him for the saving grace of gallant courtesy with which he invested his abduction of Calypso.

Calypso . . . She and I, just for fun, sometimes drop into Sweeney's store, and, when she has made her purchases, she draws up from her bosom a little bag, and, looking softly at me, lays down on the counter—a golden doubloon; and Sweeney—who, doubtless, thinks us all a little crazy—smiles indulgently on our make-believe.

Sometimes, on our way home, we come upon Tom in the plantations, superintending a gang of the "king's" Janisaries—among whom Erebus is still the blackest—for Tom is now the lord high steward of our estate. He beams on us in a fatherly way, and I lay my hand significantly on my left side—to his huge delight. He flashes his white teeth and wags his head from side to side with inarticulate enjoyment of the allusion. For who knows? He may be right. In so mysterious a world the smallest cause may lead up to the most august results and there is nothing too wonderful to happen.

IDEAS IN FROCKS

Pannier Model Among Latest, London Writer Says.

Style Is Declared to Be Decided Departure From Slim Outline of Chemise Dress.

Among the new ideas in dress which are now appearing, is the pannier skirt, writes a London fashion correspondent in the Christian Science Monitor. It is a decided departure from the slim outline of the chemise dress, which has been our great standby for so long. Of course, we are not going to wear panniers in any literal sense of the word, but this new mode demands that we shall be draped or frilled or bunched at the hips in order to obtain the new silhouette.

Some of the stiffer silks, printed or woven with little bunches of flowers of charming old-world design, are admirably suited to express this fashion; and shot taffeta, which has been little used of late and which was in no way suitable for the long lines of the chemise dress, will again come into its own. Little kilted frills and ruches with frayed edges will take the place of fringe in the way of trimming, and this should be pleasing news, as most persons will agree that the fringe has been terribly overdone. Quite tiny fringe may still be used for edging frills, but the long shaggy kind, so strangely reminiscent of the cavewoman, which used to hang the entire length of a skirt, has gone, let us hope, forever.

A dress which showed one way of expressing the pannier style, was made of taffeta, changing from peacock blue to old gold. The top layer of the three-decker skirt flared more than the others and was bunched up at the sides. The bodice crossed over in front and fastened at one side, showing a little vest of peacock blue ninon, embroidered with a fine gold thread.

Now, it is obvious that this style of dress will not suit every one though its "chunchiness" can be reduced to a minimum. Also, it must not be imagined that the pannier dress is going to disappear or become demode; it is far too useful and convenient a garment for that, and it can be made with just an indication of the new outline in the way of a tendency to drape slightly at the sides.

The coat and skirt of the more dressy or "dressmakery" order is being cut rather on Louis XV lines. The coats have a decided fullness over the hips, flaring over the narrow skirts, which, by the way, are not quite so narrow or quite so short as recently. The real tailor-made suits, however, pay no attention whatever to this change of outline, but continue to be built on straight and narrow lines.

His Advertisement.

The angler tackled the manager of the country hotel angrily. "What do you mean by luring visitors here with the promise of fine fishing?" he said. "There isn't a bit of fishing here. Every brook has a sign warning people off." "I didn't say anything about fine fishing, sir," said the manager calmly. "If you will kindly read my advertisement again with more care you will see that what I said was 'Fishing unapproachable'."

"Died today, S. Wallen, first mate"

So it was scrawled in the log of the bark Upolo—the last entry in the book—when the craft was picked up in the Java sea with not a living soul aboard, all victims of the dreaded yellow fever. Therefore it was but natural for anyone who might state that he was one Wallen, former mate of this ill-fated ship, to be looked upon with suspicion.

DOING SHOPPING FOR BABY

Searching for Apparel for the Wee Tot Affords Delight and Diversion.

The fascinating garments and other personal belongings provided for the wee baby and the baby of one or two important years are marvels of elfin daintiness that lend a peculiar delight to baby shopping.

Exquisite handwork is lavished on the making and ornamentation of the wee baby's wardrobe. Tiny tucks, hemstitching, feather stitching and needlework of all kinds with a very little hand embroidery and lace decorate the small dresses, but as a rule these are very sparingly used, a refinement of simplicity being the desirable end to attain.

The very first little frocks are simply gathered into an embroidered and lace-trimmed neckband, but for later wear dresses are made with round, square or scalloped yokes delicately embroidered and set on the frock with valenciennes insertion.

While the bottoms of the dresses are usually hemstitched many are finished with fine tucks and edged with valenciennes either set on flat or edging a tiny ruffle. This rule of restraint in trimming is occasionally broken in favor of a beautifully embroidered christening robe which is intended to be worn only on that and other state occasions and then to be carefully laid aside for sentiment's sake.

Flowers on Tailored Gowns.

Woolen embroidery, silk embroidery or jet embroidery are used on both coats and skirts; so, of course, is fur. The panels of the dress may be embroidered, pockets are embroidered, waist belts are decorated in the same way, but nothing is quite so new as the fashion of working a bright flower in wool or silk in some unexpected place and half draping it with the folds of a pannier. This is done on tailormades as well as on afternoon frocks.

Children Cry for Fletcher's

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. GRAFTING PAYS.

Top-Working to Improve Ancient Apple Trees.

Old and worthless apple trees can be changed for the better by grafting. Varieties that have been planted and found not suited to local and climatic conditions or to the demands of the market may be worked over with varieties of desired merit. Top-working may be employed also to reform the top of trees that have been found not true to name. Its most important use for beginners and in farm orchards is the changing of poor varieties for ones of value.

Even in backyards, where there is only one apple tree, the practice of grafting will result in pleasure and novelty. The writer has seen one tree bearing as many as twenty or more varieties of apples. This effect is produced by grafting each branch, or as many as desired, with a different sort.

Apple trees are usually top-worked by means of what is known as the cleft graft. As a rule, it is better to top-work each year only a portion of the top, in the case of old trees, so as not to be too severe at one time. Cut the branches of an inch or an inch and a half in diameter off squarely, making a good clean-cut with no ragged edges. Split these in the centre and insert the scions, usually two, one on either side, so that the cambium, or green layer just beneath the bark, comes in contact with the cambium of the stock, or cut-off branch. A scion is a twig, or cutting, from a tree of the variety desired. The scion must be bevelled so that it will fit into the cleft made by splitting the cut-off branch.

Coat the wounds with grafting wax or wax bandages so as to exclude the air, the spores of diseases, and to favor rapid healing. To make a good grafting wax, use resin, four parts; beeswax, two parts; tallow, one part. Melt these ingredients in an iron vessel over a slow fire, mixing thoroughly and taking care not to burn. When well incorporated, in a half-hour or so, pour into cold water, and when sufficiently cooled, in a minute or less, take out and pull like taffy until it becomes light colored, when it may be made into rolls three or four inches long and an inch in diameter, for convenience in use. A little tallow, as little as possible, will be needed on the hands to prevent sticking. As the sticks are made, they should be put in another vessel containing cold water to harden, after which they should be put away in a cool place until they are wanted for use.

Cleft grafting is not difficult in the hands of a person of ordinary care and intelligence. Try your luck at it. The best time to do it is early spring before the buds burst.—A.B.C. in the Veteran.

FOR WINTER WEAR

Jumper of Duvetyn and "Wooly" Are of Interest.

Practical Construction and Warmth the Uppermost Features in Garments for Present Season.

Two fashions that are of interest in view of the cold weather are the jumper of duvetyn and the "wooly" from London, says a writer in the New York Herald.

The name "wooly" is just such a one as might be expected from London, for the English are very clever in their easy way of finding names for things. "Wooly" is the name given the frocks of knitted material, very fine knitting, or possibly of a Shetland shawl, but in either case just the thing that our English cousins would consider the correct thing for winter.

Dressing in woolens is the usual thing in England, where a light waist in winter is far more infrequent than a fur coat might be in the middle of a hot August day on this side of the water. The "woolies" are shown in the shops here in very attractive colors, gray, with scarlet rosette, or in white with rosettes of yellow.

The jumpers may or may not be of English origin; however, as they are of the practical construction and warmth that the English women like, they are being very much worn by them.

Gray jersey is the material of one of these blouses seen in a Fifth avenue shop. It is cut with a convertible neck outlined in wool embroidery in brown and about the bottom of the fairly long peplum there is a very white band of the same embroidery. This is a slipover model and the peplum is formed by a simple narrow girdle of the gray jersey finished at the ends with tassels of the brown wool.

The dull colors seem to be the best liked in these blouses, and another blouse is of mole colored jersey with the embroidery at the girdle instead of at the bottom. The peplum or lower section of this blouse is as closely fitted as appears easy, and the slip over part is gathered into the embroidered girdle, which is composed of blocks of color done in cross stitch in peacock blue and gold color. The cuffs and the collar are edged in the same manner.

Out of Turn.

Mr. Jenkins was sedate and strong-minded making what he was pleased to term an exhibition of himself. In fact he was a highly respectable partner in a big contracting firm of decorators and, having on one occasion secured a large contract, he advertised for workmen. A large number of applicants stood outside the premises the following morning, and as Jenkins made his way to the office door dressed in his working clothes, he glanced at the waiting crowd with a keen, critical eye by way of summing them up. As he was about to enter the office after scrutinizing the man nearest him a long, strong arm shot out and Jenkins, seeing about a dozen shooting stars and comets at once, found himself on his back in the muddy road and heard a voice crying: "None o' your tricks, mate, take your turn."

ATTIRE FOR THE PARTY AND BALL

Short Skirts, Short Sleeves and Oceans of Ruffles and Trimmings for Debutante.

GOWNS TO SUIT YOUNG GIRLS

Everything Designed in Frocks With Eye to Requirements of Misses—Little Consideration Apparently Given to Matrons.

This season the debutante and the subdebutante are coming into their own. After two years of utter neglect the debt piled up is to be paid, and paid in full with all past interest due, observes a leading fashion correspondent.

Parties, dinners and dances galore are on the program, one crowding the other so closely that two years' reserve strength would seem a necessity. It seems, too, as if everything had been designed in frocks with an eye to the requirements of the debutante—short skirts, short sleeves, oceans of ruffles and foolish little trimmings—and the matron will have to find something suitable as best she may.

Now, it is a well known fact that seldom does the very young woman favor the type of dress that her elders would choose for her. The adorable youthful models hold no particular charm for the adorable youthful girl, but all this has been cleverly attended to by some one who understands these matters well. The vamp and the baby vamp are out of the running to a great extent, but it is a bit too soon to expect a direct change, so in spite of soft colors and multitudes of ruffles there is frequently a touch of sophistication.

If the very young woman is a bit determined she will finally win, for back in the corners here and there are some deliciously subtle frocks, even to those of black chantilly lace, which no one could possibly call suitable for the debutante unless one should see the modifications as shown in the models.

Colors Fresher and Clearer.

As to colors, the matron again is in for a very hard time if she is to continue in the height of fashion. Be it admitted that the colors are fresher and clearer than ever, they are a trifle difficult for any but the very youthful to wear.

One is struck immediately with the difference in the shades shown for the debutante and those in the regular department. Most of the colors are intensified, and the pastel shades the matron is supposed to wear are slightly more than that when shown for the younger woman. Jade color is one of the season's most approved shades and orchid, with a splash of mauve, is also liked.

Taffeta is quite evidently the material best adapted to the present modes in all the afternoon frocks; whether in light colors or dark blues and browns for the street, it asserts itself in the bulging skirts. For afternoon one finds further crispness added by combining organdie with the taffeta. Nets of the finest possible mesh are amazingly embroidered in eyelet. The last thing one would expect to see used on net and a thing that would be impossible if the net were not almost as fine as voile.

A combination of three materials proves a success in a linen dress, with

© Western Newspaper Union

This spring dress is just the thing for a debutante. It is girlish and dainty. Frock is made of ecru organdie, with two wide insertions of same color.

bindings of red and white, checked gingham and finishing touches of organdie.

The important thing, however, about these dresses is the manner in which they carry the impression of increased width and not an impression really so much as an actual increase in the quantity of material used in the skirts. The means whereby the width is attained are many and varied, but like the dresses for southern wear, the apron is the most prominent feature. It may be so diminutive that it is hardly larger than a bib and it may be large enough to form the skirt front or back, but it is sure to be an apron.

Pink Taffeta Afternoon Frock.

A rose pink afternoon frock is typical of many others and in a very charming way. The silk is the color of a frosty raspberry ice, with a girdle of ribbon of lavender which tones in so well that one is hardly aware there is any difference of color except that the effect is delicious. The bouffant skirt stands out at the sides as a result of the cordings set in a deep band about the hips. This in the overskirt, for there is a slightly narrower underskirt beneath.

The short sleeves are finished with a bit of the embroidered organdie and the front of the bodice has a vest of the organdie ending in a round tab-like apron below the girdle.

An afternoon gown that the very young girl will just dote on is of black chantilly lace, trimmed with soft French blue ribbons that should bring it within "mamma's approval," for they give the dress exactly the air of youth in spite of the matron's black lace of which it is made. At the hips the lace is wired so that it stands out properly, and over this in the front an apron of the lace falls so that it partially obscures the ribbon, which follows the curved line of the apron with a bow here and there.

The sleeves are short, with a deep ruffle of the chantilly, and the bodice is nothing much but a wide ruffle of it about the neck and down the sides of the front.

Ribbon, as every one knows, is a very important item in the list of trimmings this season, and if not watched carefully will be apt to get a bit tiresome. One very new way to use this form of embellishment is seen on a dress of orange-colored chiffon—rather a pale shade of orange as orange color goes, but by no means faded looking. The ribbon was applied like the crimped edge of an expert caterer's pie. It was simply crimped or fluted and laid about the neck and sleeves of the gown and also in strips down the sides of the skirt. The ribbon is in the same shade as the chiffon.

The White Crepe Frock.

A white crepe silk frock is trimmed with greegrain also in white in another and attractive manner. Beginning with the skirt, which is in every model the most important point at the present time, we find interesting extensions on the skirt at the sides, which are further supported in the effort to increase the width by the apron of the material covering the entire front of the frock and furnished with loops of the ribbon extended at the sides.

The extensions of the material are merely strips doubled and inset into the sides of the skirt so that they extend like fins on the sides. The smartest of the frocks have no collars, or, at least, the frocks intended for smart occasions have no collars, and this dress following this lead has only a tiny row of the loops about the neck.

Figured materials are among the most difficult to treat, but some particularly smart little frocks with real dash, are seen in reds and blues, in very conventional patterns, that the patterned material is now combined with plain probably adds to the smartness. Even the ruffles about the neck and sleeves, fine plaitings of the material, give the frock distinction.

The material of these particular frocks is indestructible voile and the pattern in a white dot, not too large, and set so closely on the ground of red or blue that there is more white than color. The skirt is caught up under, harem fashion, and trimmed with perpendicular ruffles of the same fine plaiting as that used on the bodice.

Keeping House In England.

In what we now regard as the happy days before the war the domestic life of middle and upper-middle class English people was built upon a foundation of cheap fuel, cheap food and cheap labor, says Mrs. C. S. Peel, in the North American Review. In families of moderate means it was usual to pay cooks from $120 to $170, house-parlormaids $90 to $140, parlormaids $120 to $150, housemaids $90 to $140, "between-maids—that is young girls helping cook and house-parlormaid—$60 to $90 per annum. People in such circumstances employed one, two, or three or even four servants who lived in and were content with an outing every other Sunday and once a week. The sum spent on food in such households varied from about $2.50 to $3.50 per head per week, $3 being an average figure. There was a plethora of charwomen who asked 60 cents a day and their food. Job servants were plentiful at wages varying from $2.50 to $3.50 a week living in, and in the case of cook $3.25 to $5 per week. Milk then cost eight cents instead of 22 cents per quart, bread 10 cents as against 18 cents per quartern, butter 32 to 41 cents instead of 60 cents per lb., sugar 6 cents against 14 cents per lb., while meat from 16 cents to 28 cents per lb. then is now from 28 to 62 cents per lb.

Have Always Made Bread.

The word bread is derived from the Anglo-Saxon "braecen," to bruise, to pound, which is expressive of the ancient mode of preparing the grain, says an exchange.

Bread was not introduced into Rome until five hundred and fifty years after its foundation. Pliny informs us that the Romans learned this, with many other improvements, during the war with Perseus, King of Macedon. The armies on their return brought Grecian bakers with them into Italy, who were called "pistores," from their ancient practice of bruising grains in mortars. The Greeks ascribe the invention of bread-making to Pan; but the Chaldeans and Egyptians were acquainted with it at a still more remote period. In the paintings discovered in the tombs of Egypt the various processes used by them in bread-making are distinctly represented. Bread from wheat was first made in China in 2000 B.C.

SPRING FEVER

Following Colds, Grip or Flu, Thin, Watery or Poisoned Blood

(By Dr. Valentine Mott.)

At this time of year most people suffer from what we term "spring fever" because of a stagnant condition of the blood, because of the toxins (poisons) stored up within the body during the long winter. We eat too much meat, with little or no green vegetables.

Bloodless people, thin, anemic people, those with pale cheeks and lips, who have a poor appetite and feel that tired, worn or feverish condition in the spring-time of the year, should try the refreshing tonic powers of a good alterative and blood purifier. Such a tonic as druggists have sold for fifty years, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is a standard remedy that can be obtained in tablet or liquid form. Made without alcohol from wild roots and barks.

Tillsonburg, Ont.—"Ever since I can remember Dr. Pierce's medicines were used in our family at home and they never failed to give good results. The 'Golden Medical Discovery' was used as a tonic and blood purifier and for bronchial trouble and it proved excellent. I have personally taken it for bronchial trouble and the 'Favorite Prescription' to build me up when I was run-down and they were both very beneficial."—Mrs. Clifford Mitchell.

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.

With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

Stable Conveniences.

Not very often nowadays do we see the two-piece door which was so commonly used on horse stables in the old barns some years ago. The device was a good one for helping with the ventilation of the stable and to let in sunshine without creating a draught around the horses' feet.

No risk of their being crowded should be taken in letting in-calf cows pass into and out of the stable. Too often the doorways are very much on the narrow side. This can be overcome by making the door the whole width of the passage to the stalls and providing a small door within the big one for the use of the attendant.

Individual automatic drinking basins for horses, similar to those used in a dairy barn, are a good arrangement for watering horses and more to be depended on than some hired help. The hired help must, however, be depended on to shut off the supply of water when a horse comes in warm after work or play.

A very small oat bin in the horse stable is sufficient for feeding round, provided it always has a feed or two in it. Run a spout from the big bin on the threshing floor down into the stable bin, and make sure that the bin in the stable is extra strong and that the lid is well fastened down when the bin is not being used.

The sunlight arrives late and departs early in the silo when the contents begin to show signs of a hard winter's feeding. An electric light, with switch at the near the foot of the silo chute, proves a convenience. The coming of the Hydro-Electric will make this possible on most Ontario farms within the next few years.

A slate attached to the beam above the head of each cow is suggested for posting the cow's record, time of calving, etc., instead of the card generally used. Experiment records are, of course, kept in a safe place.

"Drink-House Sam—Singapore—Him Know"

That was all that Wallen could get from the native Chinaman before the breath of life left his body—the last of the officers and crew but him, all of whom had died on that plague-ridden ship. Who was Drink-House Sam? What did he know?

The War's Aftermath

Through no fault of their own, six million people, 800,000 of whom are children, are starving to death in Eastern and Central Europe.

Canadians, red-blooded, charitable, humanitarian Canadians of every religion and creed, are asked to join in saving these human lives and in remedying the horrible conditions that now exist.

Hunger knows no armistice.

Will you, for humanity's sake, help to send relief?

Newspaper reports, confirmed by the stories of eye-witnesses who have returned to Canada, have brought into being a Dominion-wide organization which has set one million dollars as Canada's share in a great relief campaign.

Your own individual help is needed to-day as it never was needed before.

Representative men and women in this community will call upon you for a subscription. Let your response be in the measure of your gratefulness that your home is safe—that you and yours live in a land of plenty.

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

$200 will save one child's life for a whole year.

$20 will feed one little girl for a month.

25 cents will buy a boy more food than he has had at any one time during five years.

One change of clothes may save a boy or girl from the terrible typhus epidemic which is raging now in Eastern Europe.

Poland is crowded with children of eight or ten years old, no larger than infants of a few months, who cannot walk because of lack of food.

There are hundreds of thousands of children in Poland, Palestine, Czecho-Slovakia, Lithuania, Rumania, Siberia and the Orient left helpless and homeless by the war. Thousands of them, unable to get in to the already overcrowded orphanages, beg on the streets by day and sleep on the streets by night. And this, but for the Grace of God, might have been the plight of your own little boy or girl.

Our Odesa correspondent was in error last week in stating that Mr. Wesley Dawson had moved to Odesa. His adress is still Napanee.

One night last week Mrs. Homer Miles' sap house was looted and burned. It is supposed that the thieves, after stealing the syrup, burned the building.

The funeral of the late Bryce Allen was held on Sunday afternoon from his late residence. Deceased was in his seventy-fifth year, and leaves besides his aged widow, two sons, John Allen, deputy attorney-general of Manitoba; and William Allen, Napanee; and one daughter, Mrs. John Rowe, Detroit. The Masons, of which Mr. Allen had been an active member for a long number of years, conducted the funeral service.

A team of horses belonging to Mr. Reid, near Odesa, ran away on Sunday evening. The occupants were thrown out, after which the team took to the railway track and ran four miles, crossing four bridges, two of them large ones. They left the railroad at Mooney's crossing, two miles from Napanee, where they parted from the buggy, and were caught near Napanee, and returned to the owner on Monday very little the worse for their mad dash.
